Audio pro multi room

Sales! CHOOSE COLORS OR VARIETIES Add to the basket according to Leonardo da Vinci, simplicity is ultimate intellectualism. This mantra also seems to have been accepted by Audio Pro. Wireless speaker range What has the Swedish manufacturer suddenly earned Hi-Fi? Awards in recent years, and, having now embraced the multi-room, was an obvious choice as Product of the Year in 2018.Our first test included the award-winning and still class leader Addon C5 speaker, its large (and more sonically talented) brother Addon C10 - who won a wireless speaker Award in 2018 - and Link 1 (whose job is to connect into existing hi-fi components or wireless chain). In this expanded review, we will consider each of Audio Pro's multi-room products that we tested – an approach that only underscores the company's sonic superiority. SpeakersThe C5A Addon speakers have a pair of microphones for Alexa voice assistant Audio Pro's boom-box style range instantly beable, as is their unrivalled sonic heroism. Multi-room versions, wi-fi ones, Bluetooth instead of 'C' is just the model number 'T', and now the number is four products. Addon C3, Addon C5 and Addon C10 are almost visually the same but for sizes, addon C5A wears a volume indicator and microphone pair on its head for use with alexa voice assistant. Growing in line with the cabinet in every 2cm soft dome tweeters and a pair of medium/bass drives (and reflex ports, incidentally), these speakers are the 'distinctive feature' of the 'koala bear' driver configuration. Addon C3 has a 9cm woofer, addon C5 and Addon C5A on a 10cm meter, while the Addon C10 is the largest at 13cm. Power output from class D digital amplification rises in similar inflows: 15W, 40W and 80W respectively. All four speakers have a large circular volume control surrounded by sets of four small buttons at the top: power on, playback/pause, input selection, and Bluetooth pairing on the left, and presets to the right. Here you will also find the aux-in jack, which saves the forward speaker tip and you have to fumble around the back to find a connection. The inputs on the back of each Audio Pro are reserved for more permanent fixtures such as a power cable, ethernet cable and stereo RCA. These include sub-woofer and USB device charging outputs, as well as a passkey for optimized playback depending on whether you are using wi-fi or something else. C10 has plenty of low-end authority, their performance key is something unbeatable musicality at a similar price - even quite a lot more. Their level of detail is insightful, without adapting in favor of nit-aggregation analysis or underplaying the organization reveals both texture and timation of each instrument and vocal line. They are time with metronomic precision, but temper the dynamic kind this beautiful rhythmic accent captures. And this dynamic expression is able to reflect both a strong positive, both luxurious shift and subtle nuance on the entire performance of the speakers. He just does everything right and without fuss. As can be predicted in the increased power and size of the drive and cabinet, the addon C10 is especially possible to bend the interior with trinky rattle or low-end authority from the fireplace, ushers a greater performance at each step of the chain get up. But with every size and price increase, Audio Pro is accelerating its game. There is more space for presentation, more three-dimensionality and ambient detail, more space for more violent dynamic variation, and an additional maturity on more precision. Loftier price tag is repaid with every penny interest. While the Addon series once dominated Audio Pro's wireless speaker output, now there are class-ahead products of different shapes and sizes at both ends of the spectrum. The A10 looks more like one of Audio Pro's competitors, with only a shy fabric-covered cylinder from 20cm more reminiscent of the A10 is the speaker we've used to seeing from Scandinavian competitors, but most importantly it brings the company's sonic signature sound to a multi-room speaker costing less than £200. The usual connections are wired and wireless, featured - A10 3.5mm aux, Bluetooth 4.0, Apple AirPlay, wi-fi and Spotify Connect capacity. It also supports MP3, WMA, AAC, FLAC and Apple Lossless formats. But in it much has changed from the rectangular stablesmates of the A10. Not wanting to sacrifice the full body that has become a beloved aspect of the class- leader sonic character. Audio Pro packed the woofer to throw 7.5cm long and supported the exit with two 11.5cm passive radiators. The use of a BMR, or Balanced Mode Radiator, is the most canny tweeter, however. Among the many benefits, this straight-faced driver is capable of delivering wider distribution than a traditional tweeter - up to 180° actually - and thus can make the most of the A10 cylindrical form, making it much less hectic when it comes to positioning. As expected, this is one of the first things that comes up when we open the A10. We love the directness of our brothers, but the versatility and sound is to admire the pure spread here. There is not quite unwavering focus, nor just the weight at the low end, but it can move around our test room and still be treated to the same high-quality sound. The puff of the family for timing and dynamic judgment, while the price difference is taken into account, which is just a joy to listen to equals a musicality. At 65cm tall, Drumfire is a colossus Drumfire 65cm tall colossus that is reminiscent of a stack of guitars in a stack of guitars, even a gigantic 65cm-tall speaker that scales speaker tips proving its ability to audio Pro to preserve its award-winning sonic signature. Drumfire large bottom part 20cm subwoofer houses by 200W Class D amplifier to pump bass into the room. The back has several dials and two switches for crossover frequency and volume: one to change the speaker's standby mode, and the other to manage the stage. Drumfire's installation on the bottom is the second part, featuring two 11cm woofers and a 25mm tweeter. This box has an RCA input for an external analog source, as well as an ethernet port and 3.5 mm input. In fact, its features are usually compatible with the rest of the Audio Pro speaker offers, right down playback and preset panel on the roof. As for addon C10 Addon C3, similar drumfire better honed capabilities add on more family members and run more at the bottom end - again a step in terms of performance across the board. Another Award for Audio Pro but no longer news, but actually this year from drumfire Naim Mu-soo place - almost double the price of a product once heralded as the closest hi-fi we have heard from a wireless speaker - is evidence of activity on a different level of anything else around 2018 as our most expensive champion. Although there are a pair of unknown quantities in the Audio Pro series, the problem for us is that the Addon C-Sub means that these small speakers are deeper into low frequencies, while the A40 is the company's 40th anniversary. Bluesound Generation 2i multi-room system reviewHi-fi componentsAshtray-shaped Link 1 multi-room network Scaled and can connect any Addon speakers in the form of an ashtray, Link 1 tasks to collect song selections from the application, connect to the home network with either wi-fi or ethernet input, and distribute through the output of your choice. This optical and analog auxiliary is limited - although the 3.5mm-to-RCA cable is included, almost any existing installation can be much easier to connect to. This is really about size: For a price of £100 on link 1, any extra audio equipment - whether it's another Addon speaker or full hi-fi system - is now part of the multi-room network. Perhaps the role of an effective midwife shoulders a lesser burden than what she does, but performs her own special task with equal aplomb for speakers. This fits our Addon T3 like a slightly surprise glove - but even hooks up to feed Spotify into the reference hi-fi system, despite natural limitations, does not hold back performance. Multi-room performance It couldn't be less stressful to set up a multi-room system It's hard to imagine a less stressful installation procedure. The Audio Pro app searches for all existing products connected to the home network (with the option to add those that are not already manually connected), and then it's all there Just the way you want it. While living with the app is a slightly different proposition. In some ways it's simple - 'drag and drop' common or separate speakers, stereo pairs or multi-room areas, and free time bass and high-back pinch. But it may have a bit of a car, and it's definitely limited compared to the most competing systems. The errors are neither constant nor destructive, but the single stutter and hanging - especially pairing or speaker splitting - will be annoying in a short period of time. The limitations, meanwhile, are felt in the necessity of leaving the Audio Pro app to play music from Spotify or Apple Music, leaving a rather disconnected user experience. This also means that you can't create instant playlists that include tracks from these services and other tracks on board (Tidal, Qobuz, Napster and Deezer) or your own digitally stored collection. But it is important to point out that Audio Pro is far from the most limited multi-room application outside, and its faulty and primitive structure is forgivable from time to time, considering the price and sound quality of the speakers it controls. Sonos multi-room system reviewVerdictThe Audio Pro series doesn't include home theater components designated as some of its multi-room competitors, and the app is a bit lacking – and that may limit overall appeal for some people. But for price sound quality, this system is currently unbeatable. Like everything else, the path you choose for multi-room migration should be about whose speakers you want around your home. For us, Audio Pro makes this particular decision admirably simple. SCORESMORE:Read all our Audio Pro reviewsMulti-room audio: Everything you need to know Most multi-room systems 2019 2019
